East of Nakba (56)

Part II. Ethnic cleanser

Chapter 56 Devil's invention (4)

His research gradually came to a standstill. It was extremely difficult to determine which gene was variable and how to reinforce its ability for breeding. The most troublesome problem was that it was impossible to apply experiments on human beings even the same experiment was able to materialize at the microscopic level in his lab. Ashkenazim was actually used for human experimentation in the nasty Nazi era, but there was no way to adopt such method in Israel today.

Biological and chemical weapons were being developed nowadays. White phosphorous ammunition was actually used by Israel against the Palestinians in the Gaza strip. It was disputable whether or not the white phosphorous was a chemical weapon. But it was true that many Palestinian soldiers suffered severe burns.

Israel utilized battlefield as a perfect testing ground for new weapons. For the hardliners in the Israeli government or ultra-right-wing Jewish supremacists, it was justified to kill Palestinians on the battlefield.

However, no matter how Israel had overwhelming power, it couldn't use the power against the Palestinians outside of the battlefield. It was not permitted that Israel adopted Palestinians for medical human experiments. Once Israel practiced, it would become the successor to the Nazis in Germany.

For Dr. Girgo, target of human experiments should not be Palestinians but Ashkenazim having excellent genes.

To make a breakthrough in a standstill, he thought that it was necessary to change his way of thinking completely. In order to create genes that would become more stronger and make self-replicate, it seemed worth to research the declining lives in reverse. He thought that if the reason of decline was identified, it had to be the key of the proliferation of other lives, namely humankind.

Innumerable lives had been born and died on the earth. The history of lives on the earth was a history of ups and downs and the inevitable death of the living. Lives that once flourished in a certain area were dying out. In the modern world, people designated several lives as "endangered species" and tried to keep the declining lives.

There were several reasons for the extinction of species. For example, the sudden extinction of dinosaurs was caused by planetary collisions resulting climatic changes. And the gradual extinction of dinosaurs was taken place by gradual and periodical climatic changes between ice ages and interglacial periods.

In addition, there were cases in which the indigenous species died out when the alien species invaded into. And the most barbaric case would be the extinction of specific flora and fauna due to overhunting by humans. All of these cases took place when the species were destroyed by an overwhelming external force.
