Chapter 57 Devil's invention (5)

On the other hand, there was a case in which the species might vanish due to internal factors such as weakening of reproductive ability. If the reason could be clarified at the genetic level, the decline of that species might be stopped. In some cases, it might be possible to discover the method to enhance the reproductive ability of species. Doctor Girgo thought if the method of enhancement could be applied to the Jews, his dream would come true. He decided to take up the Arabian Oryx as a sample which was endangered species.

The Arabian Oryx once lived widely in the Arabian Peninsula. But it was threatened with extinction. In these days, the species kept alive by artificial breeding only. He heard the news by chance that one female Arabian Oryx had died at the zoo. Dr. Girgo immediately offered the disposal of the corpse of the Arabian Oryx to carry out a pathological investigation.

The dead female Arabian Oryx had been pregnant several times but had repeated miscarriages. She was now over 50 years old in human terms. He removed the ovary and anatomized it. No abnormalities were found in the remaining egg cells. But he examined the specimen from every angle with his innate tenacity.

As a result, he found one virus in the reproductive organs. That virus was quite different from indigenous organ of the Arabian Oryx.

Dr. Girgo became obsessed with researching a new virus he discovered. He tried to trace the genetic information of the new virus. In addition, he aimed to manipulate genes to transform into humanoid form.

The only thing he was afraid of was that if the virus were to transform into a humanoid form, the pandemic would take place to all races on earth. It might bring up the extermination of mankind itself.

Dr, Girgo, however, had another idea. What would happen If the new virus spread only among specific ethnic groups? For example, what if Jews didn't be infected by the virus, but Palestinians did? Once Palestinians were infected and had lost their reproductive ability, its population would gradually decrease. This was exactly what the government expected for the future of Israel state?
